

100 Extremely Convincing Fake Login Pages Against The Biggest Brands in Tech

Phishing websites, also known as spoofed websites, are a very common deception tactic that attackers now rely on to obtain a person's login credentials to a legitimate website. The operation, commonly known as credential theft is simple: send unsuspecting recipients an email spoofing a trusted brand and persuade them to click on a link that subsequently takes them to a login page where they will be asked to enter their username and password. Once completed, attackers have the information they need to login to a real account and commence with illegal activity, such as credit card fraud, data extraction, wire transfers and more.

Why people struggle to identify fake websites/login pages

The success of phishing websites can best be explained by the psychological phenomenon first discovered in the early 1990's known as inattention blindness. Defined as an individual failing to perceive an unexpected change in plain sight, inattention blindness became an internet sensation in 2012 when a video posted asking viewers how many white shirted players passed a ball. Intently focused on the task at hand, more than 50% of the viewers failed to recognize a woman in a gorilla suit in the middle of the picture.

Recognizing the perils of inattention blindness, adversaries have begun to see the importance of creating attacks that deceive the human brain in addition to defeating technological controls. Yet there are often clear indicators within phishing websites that can help people identify fake URLs should they know what to look for.

After Analyzing more than 50,000 fake login pages during the first half of 2020 here are some of the most creative attempts at trying to lure victims credentials for nefarious purposes.

All in one pay.

Pick a card, any card, or bank account, or even apply to get a line of credit from us. It's your money, you choose how to spend it.

Simple. And usually free.

It's free to sign up for a PayPal account, and we don't charge you a transaction fee when you buy something, no matter how you choose to pay.
